My Old Straw Hat.

By N. S. C.

"Tis true I love it, but what of that?
Could you blame me for loving this old straw hat.
Though 'tis napless and battered and brown?
Once the noblest hat that our club could boast.
I wore it the night I drank the toast
To the prettiest girl 'in town."

She was lovely, an heiress, a belle;
What more would you have me tell?
Though I was her humblest slave,
I gave her my time, my heart and my gold—
She gave me her fan and her flowers to hold—
They were all that she ever gave.

She is married, and far away
I am single, hopeless and gray.
And of truces have trouble but what of that?
My heart is yet tender in spite of the years
And her memory is sacred, alas! for the tears,
As I look at my old straw hat.
